The series offers an intimate and revealing portrait of siblings Jesse and Joy Huerta, showcasing never-before-seen aspects of their personal and artistic journey, beyond the stages and the hits.Across four episodes, the series reconstructs the most significant moments of their family and artistic life—from the strong influence of their father, which shaped different stages of their lives, to the healing processes that gave rise to their most personal songs. Featuring exclusive testimonies from Jesse and Joy, as well as family, friends, and celebrities, the documentary provides a look at how the siblings managed to overcome obstacles from a place of anonymity and rise to become one of the most important acts in the Latin music scene in recent years, creating a discography filled with songs that have resonated across generations of listeners.JESSE & JOY: WHAT WE NEVER SAID BEFORE premieres alongside their international tour El Despecho Tour and the release of their new album Lo Que Nos Faltó Decir, making this series a unique opportunity to rediscover their story from a deeply human perspective. The production delves into topics such as family relationships, identity, mental health, and grief, among many other experiences—always from the personal lens of the artists—building an authentic connection with the audience.With an intimate and emotional approach, the documentary series not only redefines their music but also opens spaces for conversation about what they kept silent for years. Each episode invites viewers to look beyond their public image and discover the siblings behind the musical phenomenon, and the story that led them to create countless songs that have become the soundtrack of a generation.JESSE & JOY: WHAT WE NEVER SAID BEFORE joins HBO Max’s lineup of documentary productions that highlight real and genuine stories, offering new perspectives on figures and experiences that resonate deeply with audiences. All four episodes will be available in Latin America and US Hispanic starting September 25 on the platform.
